The six-bedroom house sits on Regents Park Road, a cul-de-sac adjacent to President Trump's clubhouse. Built in 1959, the home is one of five along the cul-de-sac that share a similar Regency-style architecture, including a columned entrance, decorative pediments, symmetrical step-backs and pane windows.

The asking price is almost exactly triple its last sale price in 2022, when the seller bought the home from Edgar Bronfman Jr., former CEO of Warner Music Group and current chairman of Waverly Capital, according to property records, for $13.152 million. Bronfman bought it just six months after Bronfman for $12 million, records show.

The 5,476-square-foot house is freshly renovated, having undergone a full interior remodel and landscape redesign that was completed in October, according to information from listing agent Margit Brandt of Premier Estate Properties, who listed the property last week. She was not immediately available for comment.

The renovation was overseen by architects Barns Coy and Michael Perry, and features marble finishes, full-height glass doors that open to the outdoors and Murano glass lighting by Barovier & Toso, according to the listing. The redesigned grounds of the 0.7-acre property are the work of Nievera Williams and have a refreshed layout with an indoor/outdoor flow, a pool pavilion, a columned loggia, a summer kitchen and European finishes.

The home's proximity to Mar-a-Lago comes with other benefits as well including quick access to the Southern Boulevard bridge to the mainland, tennis courts across the street and 24/7 top-level security nearby.
