Westgate Media Park

The Westgate Media Park is the product of a multi-million dollar transformation of outdated, multi-tenant commercial buildings built in the 1970's into a premiere West LA media complex. The Park is the design of Frank Gehry cohort, Randall Stout, whose "plane wing-like" concept added immensely to the image of the property and the area as a whole. In 2002 the original wood cladding was scrapped and replaced with a contemporary curved stainless steel fascia which acts both as an architectural element and functionally as light shelves to reflect natural lights further into the interior spaces. Today , the park houses some of LA top Media and Tech users.
